MAN ACCIDENTALLY KILLED AT WORK ALONG GREEN LANE

Cause of Death Not Definitely
Determined, Say
Officials

MAY BE ELECTROCUTION

Dropped Into Open Ditch, Falling Eleven
Feet

A man is believed to have been electrocuted this morning while engaged with workmen in placing a large concrete drain at Green Lane between Farragut avenue and P. R. R. Dead.

Frank Nine, 48, 20 Fitzrandolph avenue, Trenton, N. J.

The accident occurred at about 10:30 o'clock.

Officials of the H. F. Curtis Construction Company by whom Nine was employed could not give any definite cause of the accident.

Nine, it is said, was working along side of an open ditch when he suddenly dropped into the ditch. He was rushed to the Harriman Hospital where it was stated that the man was dead upon being admitted.

Hospital attendants said there were no burns about Nine's body or any marks whatever which would indicate that he had been electrocuted.

Curtis Construction Company officials started an immediate probe of the affair but would not commit themselves as to the cause of Nine's death, until such time that they were positive.

The open ditch into which Nine toppled was about 11 feet deep and it is being dug for the placing of a concrete sewer which is to drain the underpass at the Green Lane crossing of the P. R. R.

Workmen employed near Nine at the time of the accident claim that they did not see any flash, which it is thought would have occurred had Nine been electrocuted.

The body of the dead man will be taken to his home in Trenton this afternoon.

Bring Man Wanted Here Back From Wilkes-Barre

Anthony Gornestki, 19, 514 Forrest Court, Scranton, was brought to Bristol on Wednesday by Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo, Chief of Police Jones and State Trooper Christ.

Gornestki had been sentenced to jail in Wilkes-Barre but the sentence was suspended and Bristol lodged a detainer against him through Detective Russo. Gornestki has admitted robbing the office of the Atlantic Manufacturing Company, here, on September 14th, last year, at which time he got nearly $50.

The man was given a hearing last night and held in $800 bail for court. He was a former resident of Edgely.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Davies, of 316 Jackson street, had as Saturday visitors, their cousin, Reuben Mahan, and Miss Frances Patterson, both of Philadelphia.

THERE IS PLENTY OF ROOM FOR ENERGETIC WORKERS IN COURIER'S BIG CAMPAIGN

Present Liberal Vote Offer Makes Early Start Quite Important —Make Use of Your Spare Time and Get Busy Now

$10,000.00 GOLD DRIVE IS JUST GETTING STARTED

Bristol and the entire trade territory seems keenly interested in the Courier's big Gold gift distribution. Nearly everybody seems interested in this exceptional and extraordinary home proposition. Most every place one can hear folks talking about the Courier's Gold Gift Campaign.

With this state of affairs in mind, it is indeed puzzling, why there are not more people interested in their own personal advancement; more people who wish to capitalize on this unusual offer. With public interest keyed to the highest pitch, one is sure of being accorded merited support if an effort is made.

No doubt there are many who are virtually interested but have a very much exaggerated impression as to the number of active participants enlisted up to the present time and not a knowledge of the working plan of the campaign. Every one seems to be of the opinion that a large number have entered. It has been proven, however, by the few who are making an active start, that subscriptions are to be had and that the entire populace of this section seems to be in accord with this new liberal enterprise.

Campaign Just Starting
Right now, at the very start of the campaign, is the logical time to enter. Unlike the old time contest or sub-

Truck Driver's Escape Considered Marvelous

PARKLAND, Apr. 3.—Saved from possible death by a large tree which prevented his truck from toppling down an 80-foot embankment after it was forced off the Lincoln Highway here, yesterday afternoon, Giuseppe Licciardello, 42 years old, of 64 Butler street, Trenton, was little the worse for his hectic experience. When State Highway Patrolman Coughlin, Langhorne, appeared upon the scene a few minutes later, the truck driver was dusting his clothes and bemoaning the fate of the badly-damaged truck.

Licciardello told Patrolman Coughlin he was driving east on the Lincoln Highway when he was forced off the road by two cars which attempted to pass him. The truck crashed through the guard rails and overturned as it started a descent down an 80-foot embankment. The vehicle's progress was checked by a large tree 15 feet down the slope. Licciardello, uninjured, managed to climb to the highway.

Damage to the truck was estimated at $800. The two other cars did not stop.

CONNECTICUT FIRST OF STATES WITH AIR LAWS

Still Advances in Aviation
Progress; About 30
Companies Now

SEVERAL AIRPORTS

Following is the fifteenth of a series of articles carried by International News Service depicting the advancement of aviation in the United States.

HARTFORD, Apr. 3.—Connecticut, the first state in the Union to have laws pertaining to aviation, a commissioner and department of aeronautics, a state department building, or an airplane for the transportation of its commissioner, now has twenty-four airports within its borders, either in operation or under construction. Seventeen of these are privately owned, five are owned by municipalities, and two are owned and operated by the state for military purposes. Five are seaplane bases.

At the present time approximately thirty commercial companies are engaged in the manufacture of planes or aircraft engines, the operation of air mail and passenger lines, or the operation of fixed-base passenger service and flying schools and use these aviation fields. This number includes such large firms as Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, Chance Vought, and Sikorsky Aircraft corporations, as well as small independent operators who carry passengers for hire or have ground and flying schools. It does not, however, include a large number of companies who manufacture aircraft accessories and who do not actively use the airports for test work or transportation.

Only one airport in the state, Brainard Field at Hartford, has terminal facilities. But there has been considerable criticism of the lack of space given over to waiting rooms there, and plans for an $80,000 terminal building have been considered for some time. For two consecutive years, however, the item has been taken from the appropriation of the aviation commission. In 1930 it was said that the building should not be started until

DEMONSTRATION OF OPERATION OF DIAL 'PHONES IS GIVEN TO MEMBERS OF THE SERVICE CLUBS HERE

Robert F. Morris, Local Representative of Bell Company, in Charge — Tells History of Service in Bristol

Preparatory to changing the telephone service in Bristol to a dial system basis a demonstration of the working of the new system was given yesterday before the Bristol Rotary and Exchange clubs. Similar demonstrations will be given during the next six weeks to the Travel Club and Elks and also to the children of the public and parochial schools in Bristol and vicinity above the seventh grade.

Robert F. Morris, local representative of The Bell Telephone Company, was in charge of the demonstration. Mr. Morris commented as follows on the history and development of Bell Telephone service in Bristol:

"The first telephone service was established in Bristol on September 15, 1883. In the summer of that year Captain Burnett Landreth and a few other gentlemen became interested in what was then a rather new device by which the voice could be transmitted over a considerable distance. They got together with the Telephone Company and a switchboard was installed and placed in operation on September 15, 1883.

"Among those who at that time felt that Bell Telephone service was essential to their business and who were the pioneer subscribers in Bristol are the following: D. Landreth & Sons, W. H. Grundy & Company, Roger Bros., Bristol Rubber Company, Joshua Peirce, and the Farmers' National Bank.

"The first telephone office was opened in the Martin Building at 232 Mill Street and was in charge of George Callanan. Any mention of Bell Telephone service in Bristol would not be complete unless it was tied up with the name of Mr. Callanan, now deceased, whom many of you have had the pleasure of knowing rather intimately. Mr. Callanan was manager and operator and besides his was not the easy task of convincing the public that the new instrument, the "talking machine," was a practical thing and an absolute necessity in home or office.

"The increase in subscribers was slow. At that time all the instruments were of the "magneto type" and the service was limited to local calls. The following year saw lines strung to Philadelphia, Trenton and other nearby points, and with this extended communicative area, Bristol's number of telephone subscribers grew rapidly. It was quite an event when Bristol first talked to Philadelphia as those present when the tests were made will remember.

BLAZE THREATENS BIG CHEMICAL PLANT

Three-Alarm Fire at Lenning
Plant of Rohm & Haas
Chemical Co., Phila.

HUGE PLANT MENACED

A three-alarm fire early today was sweeping through the Charles Lenning & Co. chemical plant, Richmond and Bridge streets, Bridesburg.

The Lenning plant is a branch of Rohm & Haas Co., of Bristol.

Firemen were fighting desperately to keep the flames from reaching a 50-foot hill of sulphur. They recalled that four years ago in a similar fire at the plant 52 persons had been overcome.

The blaze began in a long one-story building which is one of the largest of the 53-acre plant, said to be one of the greatest chemical factories in the world. The blazing building contained tons of various chemicals used in the manufacture of medicinal salts.

A watchman at the plant ran to the street and turned in an alarm at 11:35 p. m. As soon as firemen arrived they realized the danger of the sulphur hill igniting and turned in a "third" alarm, pumping the usual second call.

The additional apparatus enabled the firemen to check the rapidly spreading flames. At 12:30 A. M. they announced the blaze was under control, although some chemicals still were flaming and throwing dense clouds of acid smoke out over the Delaware River. The pillar of smoke attracted motorists for miles around.

Every available Bridesburg policeman was rushed to the scene in an attempt to divert traffic and let the engines and trucks of the fire department through to the scene.

Firemen used both water and chemicals to fight the blaze. Their first efforts, before the chemical trucks arrived, met with little success.

With shovels and rakes they fought to clear the path of the fire of inflammable chemicals. They formed a phalanx at the foot of the sulphur hill ready to attempt to smother with chemicals at any spot where a spark might fall.

Today in History:

Union Army occupied Richmond, 1865.

"In 1890, due to rapid growth, the one-story building at 232 Mill street was found to be inadequate and so a second story was added. Then further improvements and additions were completed about 1902. At that time a new switchboard was installed and the old system of "magneto" telephone was replaced by a modern type of apparatus by which the lifting of the telephone receiver signals "Central" that a connection is desired. At that time there were 250 subscribers connected to the Bristol office.

"In the following five years the number of subscribers had increased to over 500. Improvements to outside plants were begun. Wires in the central section of the town were placed in cables and many other improvements effected.

Bensalem Township School Board Has A Meeting

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Apr. 3.—The recently-appointed member of the Bensalem Township public school board, Percy G. Underwood, attended his first session as a member of that body of directors when a business meeting was held in the high school structure here last evening.

All members of the board were in attendance. Mr. Underwood was chosen to fill the place left vacant by the resignation of Andrew J. Reichle. President Jacob Scheufele presided.

Routine business occupied the attention of the directors.

On the 17th of this month bids for transportation of pupils to certain schools in the district will be opened. The result of the bids will determine to a great extent whether the one-room school buildings known as Hermitage, Center and Flushing, will be discontinued or not. These three structures are considered inadequate, and the board is considering having the students transported to the larger schools in other parts of the district.

Trentonian Wins Case Against Morrisville Residents

DOYLESTOWN, April 3.—A verdict for $2731.66 was awarded to Solomon N. Hanna, of Trenton, this week, in civil court in a suit against Arthur H. Carrington and Bessie S. Carrington, his wife, mortgagors and real owners of Morrisville. The suit involved settlement of a mortgage. The case was tried before Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

In the case of Stanley C. Liz, of Ottsville, against Mike Temoshuk, of Ottsville, a jury awarded a verdict in favor of the defendant without damages. There was a counterclaim in this case entered by the defendant. The plaintiff sought damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained in an automobile accident on the Lackawanna Trail. The case was tried before Judge Hiram H. Keller.

Judge Boyer directed that a compulsory non-suit be entered in the case of John Wiley, of Warrington against The Texas Company. The plaintiff brought suit to recover payment on an alleged bill contracted for the sinking of an artesian well.

FASHIONS APPROXIMATE THE FEMININE MORE NOW

"Miss Pennsylvania" and Her
47 Sisters Ready For Easter

STARTLING CONTRASTS

By Claire Ebbardt
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

PITTSBURGH, Apr. 3.—Miss Pennsylvania, 1931, in common with her 47 other sisters throughout the nation, piquetted before a full length mirror today in a dress-rehearsal for Easter.

From the mirror—a mirror of fashion for mademoiselle are madame—she learned:

Although the Easter mode is tailored, it is not severely so. Rather, it is most casual and very, very feminine. In fact, fashions most nearly approximate the feminine this year than at any time since the war.

The long dresses of last year have passed through the experimental stage of the extremely high waist and awkwardly long skirt, and have settled down to lovely natural lines.

The motif of the Easter ensemble will be femininity. It is expressed in the neatly moulded lines of coat and dress, snug shoulders and hips and natural waistlines. In the pursuit of femininity, however, Miss 1931 has not gone to the extremes of the '90's when shackled necks, high stiff collars, tightly corseted waists and heavily lined, dragging skirts prevailed.

Startling contradictions and contrasts—in color and material combinations—feature the 1931 fashions. For instance, shiny soft-crushed patent leather belts will be used with chiffon and lace for evening wear. Formal afternoon dresses are relieved with the appearance of white pique. Everything has a touch or trim of white.

Afternoon and evening dresses have light tops and dark bottoms. The style evolution during the last year has been from a lacy touch at neck and sleeves, to lacy bodices and blouses with darker substantial skirts.

The frills and ruffles of 1930 have given way to simple lines, with a reasonable restraint. Intricate cutting produces simple effects. Long dresses require short jackets or wraps. Dresses are ankle length for evening, mid-calf for street, and slightly shorter for sports.

AMERICAN COLLEGES

"They are incomparable," said a French professor the other day on the subject of American universities. He is in this country to make a study of its schools of higher learning and this eulogy came after he had seen enough of them to have basis for a valid opinion.

He was impressed with the splendid equipment at the colleges visited, particularly with the well-stocked libraries everywhere in evidence. Such equipment, together with the fact that colleges are able to draw an excellent array of professional talent, gives the American student an advantage that is virtually unlimited.

So says this French professor, and no doubt his message is a cheering one to those who are in doubt sometimes as to what American colleges are up to with the vast army of students now enrolled.

On the other hand, some American leaders in education are not so serenely hopeful. There are educational fields which are still somewhat new as far as the college is concerned; at least these fields have not worked to the fullest possibilities, according to these educators. They would admit that schools of higher learning train for industrial leadership and for the professions. They turn out good engineers and competent physicians and lawyers and dentists. But this, if one is to believe our most advanced educators, is not enough. For some years now they have said, just as they are telling the graduates again, that they are not fitting out their students with an adequate social vision.

The ability and desire to understand and pursue the interests of the whole group, whether that of city or nation, should be the distinctive trait of the college man. It might be unreasonable to expect him to put aside altogether his own interests, but a mere insistence on his selfish interests ought to be beneath the intelligence and dignity of every individual, certainly beneath those of the college man, the expense of whose training is in a great measure born by the community.

AUTOS ARE WEARING OUT

More automobiles are being built this month than in any month since last July, eight months ago. This stepping up of production is predicated partly on realized and partly on anticipated sales volume. Dealers are selling more cars and expect to sell still more.

Manufacturers and dealers are placing their faith on the perishability of the motor car. They know that thousands of cars, which would normally have been replaced last year, are approaching death from old age or obsolescence. The 1931 car-owner psychology as they read it is to be new-car wise instead of old-car foolish.

Checks on automobile registrations and gasoline consumption show that the people of the United States since 1929 have not been replacing their cars as often as during the period of peak motor car production and have been driving their cars more. This means that both new and old cars are being driven still more rapidly toward the useful-car lot or "graveyard."

"MURDER AT EAGLE'S NEST"

By WINIFRED VAN DUZER

CHAPTER XXXVIII
"MRS. Hardy sent me to see if there were anything you require, Mademoiselle. She thought perhaps you were ill since you did not come down to breakfast."

Bim put her hand to the sore place on her head. It seemed much better and her headache was gone; she felt, she decided, like doing a good day's work.

"I'm all right," she told the maid. "If you'll turn on the bath for me, please? And you might pull down the shade over there; it's gone all the way to the top."

The window was unusually high and the shade indeed had gone all the way to the top and caught there. Repeated attempts on Jane's part failed to dislodge it. Bim watched as she kept reaching up, admiring the strong, slender grace of her body and the extraordinary co-ordination of her muscles.

Finally, with a little exclamation of impatience, she took a step backward and jumped clear of the floor. Bim was sure that the toes of the ridiculous shoes touched the sill before the girl landed well forward on the balls of her feet, so lightly that there was not the slightest jarring of the tall, thin figure.

Unwelcome Compliments
"That was some jump!" Bim exclaimed. "You're an athlete, aren't you, Jane?"

"I swim a little, Mademoiselle." The maid seemed embarrassed and unwilling to hear further compliments. "Will you have a hot bath, please?"

Bim lay in the tub for some time feeling better every minute and when finally she had dressed and set out for the village no ill effect remained of her last night's misadventure save the slightly sore place at the side of her head.

Almost the first person she encountered was Carl Carey pacing up and down Main Street with his hat on the back of his head and a rather triumphant air. "Been waiting for you the last half hour," he yelled when Bim was within hailing distance. "Got something swell out of our morgue last night."

Well, I wouldn't dish it till you showed up; how's that for altruism?"

He took her arm and grinned and she grinned back. "You knew if it's swell enough I'd get it anyway."

"Hard-hearted, I call you. Just no romance at all. Love me today!"

"Maybe."

"You better had. Seriously though, this is important. We'll go over and spill to the big Yell and No man at the Station House. There's one that'll grab a lift and like it!"

Bim was vaguely resentful of what she deemed his criticism of Walter. Nevertheless she had to admit—strictly to herself—that Walter would take a lift. Despite his positive assertion that the murder at Eagle's Nest would be cleared up within a day or two, she felt that he was not so sure of this as he pretended to be.

Walter gave them a good morning, but examined the sheaf of clippings Carey put before him willingly enough. At first there seemed to Bim nothing in them which had a bearing on the case; they were dated several years back and had to do with an actor, a dancer named Wilkes Deland.

It was when Walter unfolded one of them and spread it upon the desk that she caught her breath. For there beneath his fingers was a two-column likeness of a man—Wilkes Deland; the caption designated him—only she knew that the face in the picture belonged to William Dole, Eric Hardy's butler!

"Well," she gasped. "Well!" "Told you this was good," Carey murmured. "He danced in 'Broadway Belle'—was the hit of that piece. That's eight or nine years ago. Later he was featured in 'Listen, Lady!' After that he dropped from sight. Now he turns up—a flunkey in Kingcliffe!"

Walter telephoned Jim Reynolds, who came at once and held a conference. Following this, the Assistant Chief put Bim in the police car and drove around to the corner of Main Street and River Road, where Fred Burke was doing traffic duty, and ordered him into the car.

"You'll have to walk, Bim, if you're going up the hill. Car's too jammed for three."

"I'll sit on Fred's lap, Wally. Unless—" She paused, hoping he would say that she might sit on his lap instead. But he merely nodded and she perched herself on Burke's knees. What they proposed to do was made plain to Bim as Walter explained things to his brother officer.

"You'll take this man Dole, or Deland, back to the station house and stick around while Reynolds talks to him. He may turn up something and he may not, but we won't take a chance on him bolting. Keep him down there a while. I want a look through his stuff."

"Going to let me help?" Bim inquired timidly.

"Why not? Takes a woman to know all the tricks," Walter replied with bitterness.

He was very angry with her—angry and disillusioned. A week ago Bim would have declared that this could not bother her in the least, but that, of course, was before it actually happened. Strange that Walter would change so in a twinkling and all because someone else had dared show her a little attention. Well, she wasn't going to care. She'd show him that she didn't care.

But she did care—terribly. They told her that they wished to borrow her butler and she summoned him. Wilkes—or William, as Bim still thought of him—offered no objection to accompanying the officer. He asked leave to change the neat, black uniform and returned in a few minutes looking rather distinguished in a tweed suit and soft gray hat.

A Fruitful Search

Walter and Bim lost no time in going through his possessions. They found a rather surprising quantity of clothing, all well made and of the best quality; a volume of Shakespeare and another of Keats and Shelly; a scrapbook of clippings about Wilkes Deland.

And then, beneath the lining in the bottom of a little old trunk, they came upon a picture of the Baroness von Wiese. It was not a photograph but a print cut from a newspaper and had been taken, they judged, years ago, since it showed her, not as the stunning woman who had visited Eagle's Nest, but as a fresh, girlish beauty looking out from the page with eager eyes. It bore no name, but the likeness was unmistakable.

"But anyone can trim a picture from a newspaper, Wally."

"Sure can. Only why did he want this one?"

Bim found her sympathies swinging to the butler, for no good reason. She could not believe him directly involved in the murder some way. Of course he knew something—perhaps a great many things—he was keeping to himself. Well, why? Oh, shielding someone, naturally. Everybody

Walter found another picture in the breast pocket of the uniform William had discarded. This was a photograph and either it was very old or had been handled so much as to be almost worn out. It showed a woman whose face was too blurred to mean anything to Bim and Walter, with a baby in her lap. And across the bottom was written, in faded ink, "To our very own daddy from Mother and Junior."

"Hot Cross Buns" Is The Cry in Merrie England Today

Hot cross buns, hot cross buns;
One a penny, two a penny,
Hot cross buns.

Thus, through every highway and byway, alone the budding hedgerows and over the paved streets of Merrie England today, runs the cry of the vendor of that ancient delicacy of Good Friday, ancient by tradition, but piping hot, flaky, soft and fresh from the oven according to fact.

The custom has carried to this country, to a certain extent, although hot cross buns are not cried upon the streets and carried from door to door, as they formerly were in all England and still are in many parts. Many a man born in this country of American parents of American descent for generations can remember having the doggerel verse conned for him as a child, while the tens of thousands of direct English descent have a more intimate knowledge of the quaint observance.

It is true, there are no places in America where 50,000 persons go during the day and purchase as many as 240,000 hot cross buns fresh from the baker. Such a shop stood, more than a century ago, in what was known as Jew's Row, in Chelsea. It was famous for the fine quality of its hot cross buns, which scores of bakers turned out at the rate of many hundreds an hour. They were known as royal hot cross buns, because George III, once stopped his coach in front of the bakery and tried the buns and enjoyed them.

Curiously enough, the cross bun is more ancient than Good Friday. It has been traced to the most remote periods of pagan history, though not as a cross bun. Cakes were offered by the ancient Egyptians to their moon goddess. The Greeks offered them to their divinities.

Croydon Man Found Dead Alone in His Home

William H. Boon, 64, Third avenue, Croydon, was found dead at his home yesterday.

The deceased was employed as a general handy man in and about the vicinity. He resided alone, his wife and daughter making their homes in Philadelphia.

Yesterday William Laddie, Fourth avenue, passed the Boon house and went in to see Mr. Boon about doing some work. He found the man dead in his bed. It is believed that he died the night previous.

Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young was summoned and issued a permit saying that death was due to heart disease.

HULMEVILLE

Mrs. Harry Doron, of Main street, is paying a visit at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Dunting, of Medford, N. J.

Hulmeville Boy Scouts have exchanged meeting nights, the former's sessions now being on Tuesday evening, and the Cubs gathering Wednesday night.

Following a period of ill health, E. W. Martindell, of Main street, is now able to be out.

At the residence of Mrs. Horace Cox, Bellevue avenue, will the April business meeting of the Women's Home Missionary Society of M. E. Church be held, on Wednesday night next.

Have Meditation of Seven Last Words of Christ Today

Meditation on the seven last words of Jesus Christ as he hung upon the cross will be taken up by worshippers today, as they consider the passion and death of the Master, the Galilean whose last few days on earth are being studied at this time by His followers.

Good Friday, the anniversary of the crucifixion, is to be observed in many churches throughout Christendom, with thoughts dwelling upon the death of the Christ, and plans for observance of the anniversary of His rise.

At both St. James's Episcopal Church, Bristol, and Christ Episcopal Church, Eddington, will three-hour services of devotion be held from noon until three o'clock today. At the former the rector, Rev. George E. Boswell, will speak relative to the seven last words of the Crucified. At eight this evening there will be evening prayer and sermon.

Zion Lutheran Church has arranged for a special song service and illustrations on the crucifixion for this evening at eight. In the Presbyterian Church of Our Saviour tonight will the pastor, Rev. Andrew G. Solla, preach.

Rev. Francis E. Walz will conduct a service from eight until nine at the Neshaminy M. E. Church, Hulmeville. Three services were arranged for today at the Church of the Redeemer, Andalusia. At eight this morning there was communion and penitential office; at 10 a. m., morning prayer and litany; and at eight tonight there will be prayer, penitential office, and address on "Good Friday at Jerusalem."

The guest preacher at the Good Friday service this evening at St. Paul's Episcopal Chapel, Edgely, is the Rev. A. E. Gibson, rector of Christ Church, Eddington. The service will begin promptly at eight o'clock and last one hour, with an interesting message, good singing and a cordial welcome for everybody.

Solemn ceremonies occurred at St. Mark's Church this morning with veneration of the cross, and procession in the church, followed by the Mass of the Pre-Sanctified. Rev. Father Joseph Murphy was celebrant, Rev. Father Joseph Murray, deacon, and Rev. Father Paul Baird, sub-deacon.

From 2 until 3:30 this afternoon there will be commemorated the three hours of agony on the cross, and then veneration of the cross. This will conclude with the stations of the cross. At 7:30 tonight, at St. Mark's, will be meeting of Passion and the stations of the cross.

It will not be a sleeveless summer, even in sports where cap or capelet sleeves will be seen. The evening décolletage is extremely low, to the waist in back, or extremely high.

Neutral jewelry, with pearls having a renaissance, is worn with the highly colored new costumes.

In the field of the chapeaux, a further retreat from the hairline is noted with very little space between the hat and head. Rough straws and crocheted bismas are in vogue, turbans are popular, while the trotteur or tailored suit is bringing back a modified sailor hat.

The new fur-less and collar-less coats bear a remarkable resemblance to dresses. A silk scarf replaces the collar. When fur is omitted at the neck, there is a bracelet cuff near the elbows.

Dance pajamas in lace and chiffon and in pastel satins, with bifurcated skirts, are an evening innovation.

The Connecticut river dike had been constructed to such a point as to eliminate the danger of floods at the airport. This year the item was again omitted from the appropriation as finally approved, although the construction of the dike is considerably advanced. Passengers using the airline out of Hartford now wait in the airport manager's office.

Six airports in Connecticut are lighted at night, and may be used by aviators flying after dark. Of these, three are equipped with landing lights, while the other three are marked by red border lights. Four have aircraft beacons.

The largest airport in the state is Brainard field, which includes 450 acres of land either developed or included in plans for further development. Approximately 150 acres are now used as airport. It is equipped with wind cone, landing "T," six hangars with another contemplated for construction this spring, an office building, and a restaurant. The lighting equipment consists of border lights, beacon, and flood lights. Five commercial companies use the airport, including three flying schools and passenger-carrying companies, the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft company which uses the field for testing engines, and Colonial division of American Airways operating a passenger line between New York and Boston.

Colonial is the only company operating a regular air passenger line in the state. Six round trips are made daily, with stops at Hartford, using tri-motored Ford transport ships. The air mail route between New York and Boston is also operated by Colonial. Another company operated passenger planes for three months in 1930, but discontinued the service some time ago. This company announced early this year it service would be reestablished in competition with Colonial, but the date of opening has been postponed several times.

Across the river in East Hartford, the new field of United Airports of Connecticut, a subsidiary of United Aircraft and Transport corporation, is nearing completion, with two large hangars. At present, 130 acres of a possible 165 acres are being developed as an airport, which will be used by the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft company and the Chance Vought corporation, also subsidiaries of United Aircraft. No other commercial companies will be allowed to use the field, except as they fly in for service or repairs at the two factories.

Two fields are owned by the state, and are not used commercially. One is at Gorton, where the 43d Division, Aviation, Connecticut National Guard, has its summer training quarters. The other is at Niantic, where ground troops of the national guard encamp for summer training.

Five airports in Connecticut are municipal fields. Besides Hartford, these include ports at Danbury, Meriden, New Haven (located in East Haven), and Wallingford. The field at Danbury is under development, with one hangar completed. Meriden has equipped its field with border lights, and one hangar has been erected. The New Haven field is also under development, and as yet has no hangar. The airport at Wallingford has two hangars, and is equipped with boundary and beacon lights.

One commercial company operates at Danbury; one at Meriden, and one at Wallingford. Until the New Haven field is further developed no companies will operate there.

At New Haven there is a seaplane base, on the harbor, privately owned, with no commercial companies operating there at this time. The only other seaplane base is at Stratford, which is in reality the Bridgeport port. Four commercial companies operate either from the airport or the water. Two hangars and an office have been constructed. The airport is equipped with boundary, beacon, and flood lights.

A TRIP THROUGH THE NORGE

Were the Norge Refrigerator to be enlarged so that we might clamber through it, like an admiring committee of inspection in a large new building, each part would be magnified to our eyes.

Searching with all thoroughness we could find no flaw, for this trip through the Norge would show, from the operating mechanism to the slightest items of finish, unvarying excellence in every detail.

The Food Compartment

The Norge food compartment is a marvel of efficiency. Waist high for convenience, it is lined with glistening white porcelain.

There are no dark depths and the single wide-opening door gives full visibility to the interior. All inside corners are well-rounded for easy cleaning and there are no crevices in which bacteria can collect.

Both the food compartment lining and the door play their part in furthering the surpassing results of the Norge.

Cold Kept In

There are no holes through the lining for tubes and mechanical parts. Cold cannot leak out that way. Completely around the inner face of the door is a semi-vacuum gasket. It makes an airtight seal when the door is closed and a special latch, practically automatic, assures tight closing when the door is shut.

Multiple Conveniences

On the cool, silvery shelves of the Norge, which are designed to accommodate all shapes of food and beverage containers, foods are kept in refrigeration at an automatically regulated temperature of between 40 degrees and 50 degrees.

Demonstration of Dial Telephones Is Given

Two things stand out rather prominently in the history and progress of the Bell Telephone in Bristol: The fact that since 1883 the office has been located at 232 Mill street and that from that time until about 1917 George Callanan was the local representative of the Company.

In 1913 the number of telephones connected with the Bristol Exchange had increased to 700 and in 1920 this number had reached 1,300. On January 1st, 1929 the number of telephones connected with the Bristol central office had increased to 1,638. It was becoming more and more apparent that steps must be taken at a very early date looking to the installation of a new and larger exchange, as the number of subscribers and the volume of business handled was rapidly outgrowing our present office at 232 Mill street.

Accordingly a plot of ground was secured on Pond street adjoining the Municipal Building and plans were started for the erection of a modern telephone building. Our engineering studies indicated that the dial telephone service which was the best suited to the telephonic needs of Bristol was to be installed. Consequently it is with a great deal of pride that we are able to tell you that the new office and equipment will be placed at your disposal about the middle of May.

On January 1st of this year there were 1,919 telephones connected with the present Bristol exchange, all of which will be placed in operation from the new office at the time of the cut-over.

We are sometimes asked whether the provision of dial system operation requires less operators than under the manual system of operation and whether its use is reducing employment for women. This impression is probably due to the original designation of the system as automatic although the manual system also has a great deal of mechanism and a great many automatic features. As a matter of fact a great many operators are required of the dial system to handle toll and other special calls as is evidenced by the following figures: In 1920 when dial service was first introduced there were 128,000 operators in the Bell System. At present with 28 percent of the System on a dial basis there are 160,000 operators employed and by 1940 it is estimated that 150,000 will be required.

Dial system operation requires a greater number of men in the maintenance of the equipment and also in its manufacture and installation than is necessary under manual operation. In connection with your local situation I want to tell you that no operators will be without a position as the result of conversion to dial system. In the new office, Mrs. Elbertson, the present Chief Operator, will be in charge with an able corps of assistants to help you in the handling of your out-of-town information, etc. calls.

Under manual operation one of the problems confronting us is to have the proper number of operators on duty at all times and under varying conditions. This is simplified with the installation of dial service where the maximum equipment is at your service any time of the day or night. For example, if there should be a fire or a major emergency of some sort when there was only one operator on duty, it would be difficult for her to handle all of the calls which our subscribers would desire to make until such time as relief in the way of additional operators could be brought to the office. Under dial operation the maximum number of calls can be handled by the machine at any hour of the day or night.

Miss Thelma A. Mitchell gave the demonstration using a large dial mounted on an easel. A victrola record was used to demonstrate the different tones to be observed when making a call from a dial telephone.

Miss Mitchell stated that the first and most important detail in placing a call is the securing of the correct number from the latest issue of the telephone directory, because when the new system of operation is placed in service, all telephone numbers will be composed of numerals only. There will be no letter designation such as J. M. R. and W. Each party on a party line will have a different number. For example, "2799" and "3468" may be telephones on the same line. Until the time at which the new office will be placed in service, the present directory should be used. After that time, the new directory, which will be distributed a few days before the cut-over, should be used. During the period of a very few minutes at the time of the cut-over, almost 2,000 subscribers in the Bristol exchange will be disconnected from the old manual office and connected to the new dial system office.

The different steps to be followed in using a dial telephone are as follows: First, remove the receiver from the hook and listen for the dial tone which indicates that the machine is ready to receive your call.

Second, dial the number desired and listen for the ringing signal which indicates that the called telephone is being rung.

Third, the busy signal which, if the called telephone is in use, indicates that the line is busy.

If the line is busy and you desire to make a second call immediately hang up your receiver for a few seconds to allow the apparatus to become disconnected from the previous call then remove the receiver and listen for the dial tone. As soon as this tone is heard proceed to dial the number desired.

To obtain the telephone numbers of any subscribers not listed in the latest telephone directory, dial 113, the Information Operator.

For person-to-person calls, i.e., calls to a particular person, dial 119 and give the name and address, or telephone number of the person desired, to the operator who answers.

For station-to-station calls, except to Cornwells, i.e., calls by number to out-of-town points, be sure to obtain the correct number from the latest directory or from the Information Operator. Then dial Zero and give the number desired to the operator who answers.

For calls to Cornwells, dial 91 and give the number desired to the operator who answers.

To report your telephone out of order, for service difficulties, an emergency or assistance, dial "Zero," and give the facts to the operator who answers.

There are really just these four simple codes to remember, 113 for Information, 119 for person-to-person calls, 91 for calls to Cornwells and Zero for other station-to-station calls and to report service irregularities.

In order to call a subscriber on your own line, if you are on a party line, i.e., a line now having letter designations such as J, M, R, W associated with the telephone number, it is necessary to dial a code number rather than that subscriber's listed call number. To obtain the necessary code number, if you do not know it when you wish to call, first dial the operator and give her the number of the party you want to call and tell her it is one of the parties on your line. She will give you the code number. Replace your receiver for a moment in order to permit the apparatus to be disconnected from the previous call, then dial the code number and replace your receiver. Your bell will then start ringing intermittently until the called party answers. When your bell stops ringing, it indicates that the called party has answered. Remove your receiver and begin the conversation. If your bell does not stop ringing after a reasonable time, it means that the called party does not answer and you should remove your receiver for a few seconds and replace it. This will stop the ringing and disconnect you from the called party's telephone.

Rural line subscribers, i.e., those lines now having J-2, R-3, etc., associated with the telephone number, on the same line will have the same call number, except for the last digit. In order to call another subscriber on the same rural line, dial "119" followed by the last digit of your number and the last digit of the number of the party desired. For example, if your number is 3002 and you wish to call 3005, dial 11925. After dialing, replace your receiver and listen to your bell the same as you would on a party line. When making a call from a party line or rural line telephone, always listen in the receiver before starting to dial to be sure nobody else is using the line. If the dial tone is not heard, inquire if the line is being used. If no reply is received, hang up your receiver for a few seconds and then try again.

If, when you are listening for the dial tone, your hear successive clicks in your receiver, it indicates that another party on your line is dialing. By lifting the receiver at this time you have accidentally interrupted his call. You should then wait until he has completed the dialing and inform him that you have accidentally interfered with his call and hang up your receiver, permitting him to use the line.

If, while you are dialing, you hear another party lift his receiver to make a call, inform him that the line is in use and request him to replace his receiver. By lifting the receiver at this time he has accidentally interrupted your call. You should hang up your own receiver for a few seconds then remove the receiver, listen for the dial tone and dial the complete number again.

Complete dial instructions will appear in the new directory and also in a folder which a representative of the Company will deliver to you before the cut-over.

SPORTS
WHITE ELEPHANTS ARE CROWNED CHAMPIONS

By T. M. Junc

Led by the Brady brothers, "Jimmy" and "Huby," the White Elephants won the third and final game of the A. O. H. Basketball League last night and were crowned the champions of that circuit. The Wildcats were the victims with the score being 41-20.

Both Brady boys scored four field goals and scintillated on the defense to lead the Elephants to victory. Whenever an Elephant rally was started it was by either Brady brother, who gave all they had.

The defense of the winning team was outstanding. For the last two minutes of the first half and for fifteen minutes of the second session, the Wildcats were held scoreless from the field, scoring their few points via the foul method. It took thirteen minutes before the first Wildcats' foul point was scored in this half.

For eighteen minutes of the first half, the Wildcats matched the winners on the defense. Then suddenly after a time-out was called the Wildcats defense cracked and never could pull itself together again. It was at ter the defense broke off that the Elephants began to pile up point after point and put the game on ice before half of the second canto was played. "Jimmy" Lake showed remarkable shooting from the free shot mark, hitting the net seven times in as many tries. He also had three field goals for his night's total. Paul McGinley was the scoring ace for the losers with four double-deckers and two fouls. Rodgers played well on the defense for the losers.

John Brady opened the scoring by sinking a long shot from the side. H. Brady scored on a field goal from under the basket and when he added another in the same manner, the Elephants possessed a 6-0 lead. McGinley scored the first Wildcats' points with a field goal on a pass from McClafferty. Rodgers missed a foul try. Rodgers followed the shot and scored a beautiful double-decker, making the score 6-4. H. Brady had two foul tries but missed them both. Lake scored on a pass from J. Brady. Rodgers was fouled and sunk the shot, making the count 8-5 in the Elephants' favor. Lake scored a foul shot for the Whites. McGinley scored two double-deckers in succession for the Wildcats and added a foul goal to give the Wildcats a 19-9 lead. Coyle had a chance to tie the count with a foul try but failed. Gosline fouled Lake who made the shot good, tying the score at 10 all.

After a timeout was called and play resumed, Lake, J. Brady, and H. Brady scored quick field goals for the Elephants and the half ended with the score: Elephants, 17; Wildcats, 10.

Gosline missed a foul as the second half opened. Rodgers followed with a foul try with the same result. J. Brady scored another long shot for the White Elephants. Gosline missed another foul. Taffe was fouled and made the score 20-10. H. Brady scored a long shot. Lake was fouled and sunk the shot, making the count 23-10. McGinley scored two double-deckers for the Wildcats and added a foul goal to give the Wildcats a 26-10 lead. Coyle had a chance to tie the count with a foul try but failed. McGinley and H. Brady missed foul tries. Gosline scored the first Wildcats' point of the second half, by hitting the net with a foul try. McGinley followed with another point and the score was 27-12. J. Brady tapped the ball in after his brother had a foul try and another two points went to the elephants. When Connors scored a field goal and Lake followed with two foul shots the Elephants had a 33-12 lead. Coyle amassed two more points on a shot from under the basket. Kerrick scored the first double-decker of the second half for the Wildcats on a pass from Rodgers. The score was then Wildcats, 14; Elephants, 35.

Rodgers gave the Wildcats two more points on a good shot. Coyle received a pass from H. Brady and the count was 37-16. Coyle added a foul goal while McGinley scored a twin-pointer from mid-court for the Wildcats. Lake scored a field goal for the Elephants and was fouled at the same time. He scored the foul shot and the score was 41-18. As Gosline scored a double-decker for the Wildcats, bringing their score to 20, the whistle blew ending the fray.

The Forlorn Phillies By HARDIN BURNLEY

LAST! the benign shade of William Penn must weep with that of Ben Franklin every time celestial fans commune about the Philadelphia Phillies. Not since 1915 have they won a National League pennant. Their glory then is now but one with that of Nineveh and Tyre, of Imperial Rome and Germany, and of Philadelphia's own Alexander the Great who when heard from last was combing beards with House of David pitchers.

The Phillies were a most lowly last in 1930 and right now their prospects are hardly auspicious though Manager Burt Shotton thinks the Phils will surprise everyone if team play starts clicking. He points out that they were second in team batting in the league about 210 pounds. Some say he's last season and that, with improved pitching, the Phils are very liable to be a winning outfit this year.

Among changes being made in Shotton's 1931 machine, the most notable perhaps are the acquisition of Russell "Buzz" Arlett to take "Lefty" O'Doul's place in the outfield, and the trade with the Pirates which brought "Dick" Bartell to shortstop in exchange for Tommy Thevenow.

Arlett is a veteran at 32 having played pro baseball thirteen years before getting his big league chance. For many seasons he has been a consistently heavy hitter with Oakland in the Pacific Coast League and the sharp out there say he is still in his prime. "Buzz" is a big boy, 6 foot 2 and scaling and in team batting in the league about 210 pounds. Some say he's a far better fielder than O'Doul (that's likely) and a more consistent slugger.

Bartell is succeeding Thevenow chiefly because the Philly powers think "Dick" is superior to "Tommy" at bat. Both are gorgeous infielders but Richard batted 320 last season while Thevenow hit for .287.

With "Chuck" Klein and "Don" Hurst hitting as of yore, the 1931 Phils again should feature heavy artillery but a pre-season survey indicates that club pitching and general fielding class are not what those of real pennant contenders should be.

However, the keen Burt Shotton is about due to spring a winning team on the Athletic-minded public. One that can keep out of the cellar may be sufficient for 1931!
